The Regina Riot stomped all over the Winnipeg Nomads in their home opener at Mosaic Stadium on Sunday, taking it 38-15.

The triumph brings the Riot's record to 2-1 with one more game to play in the regular season.

"We played well, we were very consistent, which is sometimes our toughest job," said Riot head coach Jon Baxter.

"We had a good crowd showing, we had a good pep rally yesterday. So far things are going as planned.

Riot quarterback Aimee Kowalski said: "I felt pretty calm out there, it was nice to have a lot of those players behind me.

"Our little running back had some big runs. She was a pretty big stud out there, so that is good to see."

Running back Carmen Agar did have a breakout performance Sunday.

"It is good to be coming off of two big wins," said Agar. "We will still work through some of our mistakes from this game and hopefully be ready to go on Sunday.

"We have got to thank the fans for coming out to support us; they were nice and loud. It was exciting out there today."

The Riot will take on their rivals the Saskatoon Valkyries next Sunday in a repeat of last season's Prairie conference finals.

Earlier this season, the defending league champion Valkyries beat the Riot 36-6. Currently, the Riot are 0-4 when playing their rivals from the north. Quarterback Kowalski thinks the Riot need to use home-field advantage in order to buck this trend.

"Going into playing Saskatoon at home, hopefully we can get even more spectators out and make it a bigger game for them," said Kowalski.

Riders take playbook to rainy Saskatoon

Training camp. Team also announces contract extension of Brendan Taman

DORIAN GEIGER

The Saskatchewan Roughriders made an afternoon cameo in Saskatoon over the weekend at the University of Saskatchewan's Griffiths Stadium.

Despite the grey, wet weather, optimism at the camp was high for the quickly approaching Canadian Football League season.

On the same day as the Saskatoon camp, Riders president and chief executive Jim Hopson announced the organization had extended the contract of general manager Brendan Taman into the 2013 CFL season.

Taman, who is entering his third consecutive season with the Roughriders, has been with the team since 2009 and in control of football operations since last November. He replaced former general manager Eric Tillman in January 2010.

"Brendan has put his mark on this team. We think it was the right decision and we're very pleased to have him on board this year and the next."
Riders chief Jim Hopson

Brendan Taman CONTRIBUTED/CFL

Despite the Roughriders' lacklustre 5-13 record last season, Hopson was positive Taman has what it takes to restore Riderville's winning reputation.

"Brendan has put his mark on this team," Hopson said from the sidelines of Griffiths Stadium. "We think it was the right decision and we're very pleased to have him on board this year and the next. We have an option for the year after, so we think it's good for the organization, long and short term."

The news that Taman had been given just a one-year contract drew criticism from some local media, but Hopson made it clear the contract was intended to motivate Taman's performance.

"We want to make sure it's performance-driven. Brendan was very comfortable with that and he understands that," Hopson said.

Taman, a native of Saskatchewan, spent the past decade as a Winnipeg Blue Bomber. For five seasons he served the Bombers as general manager and vice-president of operations.

The Riders open the CFL pre-season on Wednesday when they travel to Vancouver to take on the B.C. Lions.

They play their first home exhibition game, against the Calgary Stampeders, on June 22 at Mosaic Stadium. The Roughriders open their CFL campaign on June 29 against the Tiger-Cats in Hamilton.

Greenhouse-gas deal in works for coal-fired electricity

Saskatchewan and Ottawa are negotiating an agreement on greenhouse-gas regulations for coal-fired electricity.

Federal Environment Minister Peter Kent said Friday that the government remains committed to addressing climate change and an agreement will simply avoid duplication so the industry does not face two sets of regulations.

"We remain focused on our mutual goal of reducing greenhouse-gas emissions from coal-fired electricity, but want to ensure that Saskatchewan has the flexibility to choose the approach that best suits its circumstances," Kent said.

Saskatchewan Environment Minister Ken Cheveldayoff said the province needs the flexibility.

Ken Cheveldayoff CONTRIBUTED

He said an agreement will allow the province to proceed with clean coal and carbon capture and storage technology at its Boundary Dam and other coal-fired plants.

In April, the David Suzuki Foundation released a report naming Saskatchewan as the province with the highest per capita greenhouse-gas emissions in Canada. It criticized the province for not having a plan to end its reliance on coal-fired plants.

The province has said it has no plans to move away from the coal industry, its primary source of energy.

Carbon capture and storage have been touted as a high-tech way to help with the world's carbon problems, but critics say not enough is known about the environmental consequences of burying carbon dioxide in the ground.

Coal-fired electricity generation represents 11 per cent of Canada's total greenhouse-gas emissions. By 2020, the federal government plans to reach a target of a 17 per cent reduction in total greenhouse-gas emissions below 2005 levels.

Ottawa reached a similar regulations agreement with Nova Scotia this year.

Head-on collision

Two people die in highway crash

Two B.C. residents are dead after two vehicles collided on Sunday. The accident took place at about 12:20 p.m. on Highway 7, west of Rosetown, when a westbound car tried to pass a westbound transport truck and crashed head-on into an eastbound SUV. Poor visibility from heavy rain likely played a role in the crash, police said. A 47-year-old male and a 19-year-old female from Sorrento, B.C., were killed. Two other females and a male, all from Sorrento, were taken to hospital in Saskatoon. Two men in the SUV, from Plato, Sask., were also hospitalized. METRO

Two homicides in two days

Crime. Two men dead over weekend, one in downtown Saskatoon, one after altercation at grad ceremony at Pelican Lake First Nation

MORGAN MODJESKI
Metro in Saskatoon

Saskatchewan saw two homicides over the weekend — one in downtown Saskatoon and the other at Pelican Lake First Nation.

The first homicide, which police responded to at roughly 3 a.m. on Friday, occurred in the 800 block of Broadway Avenue, in an apartment above Buds on Broadway.

Police received a call regarding and injured person and when they arrived, officers and personnel from MD Ambulance found an unresponsive 29-year-old male who was pronounced dead on the scene.

Police initially held a 35-year-old person of interest in custody, but he was released Saturday.

When asked what kind of an injury the man sustained in order for the police to rule the incident a homicide, Kelsie Fraser, social media and media relations specialist with the Saskatoon Police Service, said it's part of an ongoing investigation.

"We responded to a 911 call that there was an unresponsive male, MD Ambulance were dispatched at the same time and he wasn't able to be revived," said Fraser. "The cause of death, that's still part of the investigation ... and I can't speculate at this time."

Police say they're still looking for witnesses to come forward with information. "We have one witness that I know of and we're looking for people to come forward," said Fraser.

The second homicide was reported at roughly 6:30 a.m. Saturday when Spiritwood RCMP were called to an unresponsive 23-year-old male in an open field on Pelican Lake First Nation.

RCMP said youth were celebrating graduation when an altercation occurred. After CPR attempts by members of Emergency Medical Services it was apparent the unresponsive man was dead. RCMP believe the man's death to be the result of a homicide and have arrested an 18-year-old male.

Saskatoon police were at the scene on Broadway Avenue to investigate the murder of a 29-year-old man on Friday morning. MORGAN MODJESKI/METRO

Regina artist reflects on impact of colonialism on aboriginal cultures

Self-Portrait as Twins is part of a Bob Boyle exhibit at the Canadian Museum of Civilization in Ottawa. DON HALL

A series of paintings on flannel blankets by the influential Regina-based Métis artist Bob Boyer have gone on display at the Canadian Museum of Civilization.

The paintings, included in a Boyer retrospective, make powerful statements about the harmful impact of colonialism on aboriginal cultures, says the museum.

Used as a surface for art, the blankets are a "sinister symbol" of a horrific colonial practice — the distribution of government-issued blankets impregnated with the smallpox virus in the 19th century. One work, titled A Smallpox Issue, shows three tipis at the top and bloodied land at the bottom.

Some of the blanket paintings celebrate indigenous cultural traditions around the world.

The retrospective, adapted from a version developed by the MacKenzie Art Gallery in Regina, includes 58 works produced between 1968 and 2004, the year Boyer died.

Boyer served as a longtime faculty member at the Saskatchewan Indian Federated College in Regina.

34 arrested over Grand Prix protests

Quebec. No major incidents on Sunday despite plans by an anti-capitalist group to disrupt subway line

A weekend that brought Montreal's social unrest to the international stage ended Sunday with police clamping down on an attempt to disrupt the city's Grand Prix Formula One race.

Anti-capitalists and students upset about tuition-fee increases held demonstrations throughout the four-day event, considered the world's premier auto racing series. The protests gave visitors a taste of the dramatic scenes — sometimes joyful, sometimes violent — that locals have been witness to for months.

Many of those scenes played out just steps away from a huge party on Crescent Street for the festivities, considered the biggest annual tourist event in Canada.

Every night, a coalition of students and anti-capitalists descended on the popular night-club strip to protest against the event. On several occasions there were violent clashes between protesters and riot police, with tourists caught in the middle.

Leading up to the race, officers were posted at stations throughout the subway system, with sniffer dogs and lines of police at the station near the track. Police said 34 people were arrested and 40 more were forced from the off-shore island, Ile Ste-Helene, where the race was held. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Omnibus bill. Proposed changes in the hundreds

Opposition politicians throwing hundreds of amendments at the Conservatives' omnibus budget bill are set to find out which ones are going to stick.

What could be a marathon week in the House of Commons begins Monday with the Speaker expected to decide how more than 1,000 changes proposed to Bill C-38, the government's budget-implementation bill, will be dealt with in the House.

The 400-plus pages of legislation amends some 70 laws, including the process for environmental assessment and the rules around Old Age Security and employment insurance.

With a Conservative majority, the bill is set to pass, so all the opposition parties have pulled procedural rabbits out of their hats.

The New Democrats and the Liberals gave notice of more than 1,000 amendments seeking to delete various clauses of the bill. Technically, a vote is required on each one, which could keep the Commons sitting around the clock for days. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Only playing games?

Conservative House Leader Peter Van Loan suggested the government may look at some of the proposed changes, but argued the lion's share are merely procedural games.

Two 'xenophobic' ads taken off the air in Egypt

Egypt's government pulled TV public-service announcements that warned against talking to foreigners because they might be spies after critics charged the spots fueled xenophobia and aimed to tarnish those behind last year's uprising.

The two spots ran on state and private television stations for a few days before Minister of Information Ahmed Anis ordered them off the air, a media official said Sunday.

One opens with a blond-haired young man scanning a café. It goes on to show the visitor smiling slyly and narrowing his eyes while listening intently to Egyptians complaining about the economy and talking about overhearing a plot against the ruling military council in the subway. The narrator warns Egyptians not to share with outsiders their woes about the economy or political situation. Both spots close with: "Every word comes with a price. A word can save a nation."

Ahmed Maher, co-founder of one of the youth groups that steered the uprising, described the spots as "deceptive." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Apple. New iPhone, iPad software anticipated

Apple CEO Tim Cook is expected to show off new iPhone software, updated Mac computers and provide more details on future releases of Mac software when he kicks off the company's annual conference for software developers on Monday.

The announcement of new software for the iPhone, iPad and iPod Touch has been confirmed by banners that appeared at the Moscone conference centre in San Francisco on Friday, reading "iOS 6."

Apple has for the past few years used its Worldwide Developers Conference as an opportunity to announce new iPhone software.

What's not known is what new features will come with iOS 6, or when it will be released to consumers. Usually, the new software becomes available for download around the time a new iPhone model appears.

Apple-watchers expect the next version of the iPhone, the iPhone 5, to appear this fall, about a year after the launch of the 4S model.

In 2010, Apple demonstrated the new iPhone 4 at the WWDC, but analysts don't expect the company to show off a phone model this year.

With the launch of iOS 5 last year, Apple added many features already found in competing smartphone software. It also added the "Siri" virtual-assistant feature, which interprets voice commands and talks back to the user.

This year, there are fewer "catch-up" features to add, so Apple watchers expect more modest improvements.

Some speculate that Facebook could become more tightly integrated, in much the same way that Apple baked Twitter functions into its software last year.

That could make it easier to post Facebook status updates from within Apple's apps.

On the Mac software side, there are fewer unknowns. Apple already demonstrated most of the features of OS X 10.8 "Mountain Lion" in February and said it will go on sale late this summer.

Venezuela. Chavez eyes violations on oil quotas

Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez says his government is concerned some fellow OPEC member countries are violating their quotas by producing too much oil.

Chavez says Venezuelan Oil Minister Rafael Ramirez will bring up those concerns at next week's OPEC meeting in Austria.

Chavez didn't name any countries he thinks are exceeding production quotas. But Saudi Arabia, for one, has been pumping more oil to offset supply losses from Iran.

The price of U.S. benchmark crude ended the week at $84.10 US a barrel in New York, near its lowest level since October.

Chavez says OPEC members should maintain what he calls a "fair level" of oil prices. He says that should be about $100 a barrel. Chavez's socialist government relies heavily on the country's oil earnings to pay for public programs.

Charity auction

Lunch with Buffett nets $3.5 million

The cost to dine with investor Warren Buffett has apparently spiked in value, with one deep-pocketed bidder forking over nearly $3.5 million during a charity auction Friday night.

The annual auction for a private lunch with the Nebraska billionaire closed following a flurry of activity in the final hours. In the end, the highest bid was a record-breaking $3,456,789.

The auction benefits the Glide Foundation, which helps the homeless in San Francisco. Buffett has raised more than $11.5 million for the group in 13 past auctions. The event provides a significant portion of Glide's roughly $17-million annual budget that pays for social services to the poor and homeless.

"We just had a most amazing, shocking experience occur in our great city," Glide's founder, the Rev. Cecil Williams, said in a statement Friday night. "We are shouting, dancing, rejoicing and celebrating."

The organization said Friday's winning bidder wished to remain anonymous.

Debt crisis. Spain becomes the fourth and largest country to ask eurogroup to rescue its failing banks

Spain's grinding economic misery will get worse this year, despite the country's request for a European financial lifeline of up to $125 billion US to save its banks, Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy said Sunday.

A day after the country conceded it needed outside help following months of denying it would seek assistance, Rajoy said more Spaniards will lose their jobs in a country where one out of every four are already unemployed.

"This year is going to be a bad one," Rajoy said Sunday in his first comments about the rescue since it was announced the previous evening by his economy minister.

The conservative prime minister added that the economy, stuck in its second recession in three years, will still contract the previously predicted 1.7 per cent even with the help.

Spain on Saturday became the fourth — and largest — of the 17 countries that use Europe's common currency to request a bailout — a big blow to a nation that a few years ago took pride as the continent's economic superstar only to see it become the hot spot in the eurozone debt crisis. Its economy is the eurozone's fourth largest after Germany, France and Italy.

Although Spain has not yet said how much money it would seek, the eurogroup — finance ministers of the 17-country eurozone — said in a statement Saturday that it was prepared to lend up to $125 billion.

Doctors defy technophobe image with texts, tweets

There's a stereotype that doctors shun technology that might threaten patients' privacy and their own pocketbooks.

But a new breed of physicians are texting health messages to patients, tracking disease trends on Twitter, identifying medical problems on Facebook pages and communicating with patients through email.

So far, those numbers are small. Many doctors still cling to pen and paper, and are most are comfortable using e-technology to communicate with each other — not with patients. But from the nation's top public-health agency, to medical clinics in the heartland, some physicians realize patients want more than a 15-minute office visit and callback at the end of the day. Far from Silicon Valley and East Coast high-tech hubs, Kansas City pediatrician Natasha Burgert offers child-rearing tips on her blog, Facebook and Twitter pages, and answers patients' questions by email and text messages.

"These tools are embedded in my work day," Burgert said.

"It's much easier for me to shoot you an email and show you a blog post than it is to phone you back. That's what old-school physicians are going to be doing, spending an hour at the end of the day" returning patients' phone calls, she said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BEHOLD, SUPERPREMIER

URBAN COMPASS
Paul Sullivan
regina@metronews.ca

Brad Wall looks a bit like Clark Kent, but don't be fooled. He's really Superpremier, ready to leap over Thomas Mulcair in a single bound.

Saskatchewan's favourite son is Canada's alpha premier these days, and he's been hitching a ride on a political comet ever since he decided to take on federal NDP Leader Mulcair and his comment that the oilsands are infecting Canada with a case of "Dutch Disease": Oil fuels the creation of petro-dollars, which make exports more expensive, causing harm to the manufacturing sector.

Not coincidentally, the manufacturing sector is in the East, along with Mulcair's voters. Wall and the oilsands are in the West, which is enjoying an economic boom thanks to resource royalties. Now Mulcair is threatening to jeopardize that boom, demanding that "polluters" pay for the environmental impact of their extractions.

Tackling the NDP

"Wall slams Mulcair's logic to the, er, wall and points out that his demand to make polluters pay is really a cleverly concealed scheme to steal from the rich (the West) and give to the poor (the East) via some nefarious carbon cap and trade."

As far as we out here can tell, the only difference between Mulcair and Lex Luthor, Clark Kent's nemesis, is that Mulcair is very hairy, while Luthor is as hairless as Dr. Evil.

Superpremier to the rescue. Wall slams Mulcair's logic to the, er, wall and points out that his demand to make polluters pay is really a cleverly concealed scheme to steal from the rich (the West) and give to the poor (the East) via some nefarious carbon cap and trade.

As Wall stands tall, counterparts Alison Redford of Alberta and Christy Clark of B.C. stand by and admire his … poll results.

Superpremier is not only the mightiest premier in the land, he is the most popular by a Prairie mile. He enjoys a 67 per cent approval rating among his voters. Only the freshly minted Redford is even close. Kathy Dunderdale from Newfoundland is a distant third, but surely that's only because those polled confuse her with someone from This Hour Has 22 Minutes. Poor Clark is second last. She's too busy holding on to her seat to become the Voice of the West, even if she does have a mouth that can roar.

Interestingly, this national joust is not hurting Luthor, I mean, Mulcair either. Another poll has him and his NDP actually leading the Harper government, albeit by a tiny fraction, but this Dr. Evil stuff obviously has some political currency, so don't expect it to end soon.

To be clear, there is no chance Mulcair's threats will have any impact on the oilsands or the West as long as Harper, MP for Calgary Southwest, is the prime minister, which he will be at least until Oct. 19, 2015, the date of the next federal election.

Based on the way things are going, at that point Wall will still be the most popular premier in the land, and Mulcair will be cooling his heels, on ice, in the Fortress of Solitude.

Never underestimate the deceptively mild-mannered Clark Kent … or his double.

Something's fishy about this ...

Post-violence pampering

Pedicure shops setting foot in Iraq

An Iraqi man immerses his feet in a fish tank with Garra rufa, also known as doctor fish, at Baghdad's first fish-pedicure salon in Iraq on Sunday. The latest luxury spa in Iraq's capital offers another small sign of life creeping closer to normalcy, if your definition of "normal" includes having tiny fish nibble on your feet.

The salon aims to bring in Iraqi customers who have recently begun to venture out again as the violence that engulfed the country after the 2003 U.S.-led invasion ebbs. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Water oasis

- Bombings and shootings are still common, but daily life has improved for most people in recent years. Dozens of beauty salons, cosmetic surgery centres and other enterprises have sprung up to cash in on war-weary Iraqis looking for pampering.
- Doctor's Fish Spa opened this year in western Baghdad's upscale Mansour area.
- Owner Musbah Saleh says he's confident of success for his piscine pampering project despite minor logistical hurdles, such as the city's frequent power cuts that force him to run a noisy generator.

Nailing it

"Chinese massage centres, beauty salons are all thriving. So this kind of business has a promising future.... The Iraqi people need these things because they couldn't have them before."

Doctor's Fish Spa owner Musbah Saleh, 37, commenting on the new spa industry that is thriving in Iraq.

Curb appeal

Spa located near security checkpoint

Violence in Baghdad has dropped sharply in recent years, after a wave of sectarian attacks that pushed the country to the brink of civil war. The wealthy Mansour neighbourhood near Musbah Saleh's spa saw some of the worst of the sectarian carnage.

Just down the street from Doctor's Fish Spa, there is a police checkpoint — one of dozens across Baghdad — with concrete barriers, rolls of barbed wire and armed police. Far from scaring customers off, the checkpoint was part of the location's appeal, Saleh says. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Endangered whale numbers up after ships rerouted

The population of a once nearly extinct whale is on the rise, partly because of an unlikely collaboration between a Canadian oil company and an aquarium.

Ten years ago, New Brunswick-based Irving Oil rerouted its shipping lanes in the Bay of Fundy to move away from the feeding grounds of the North Atlantic right whale, reducing the risk of collisions.

It's a move that scientists say has played a great role in the recovery of the endangered species.

Dr. Moira Brown, a senior scientist at the New England Aquarium in Boston, said in the past decade, the right whale population has grown by an average of two per cent annually, from about 350 whales to more than 450. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Creatures lure audiences

Circus animals and space beasts have lifted Hollywood to a huge weekend. The cuddly critters of Madagascar 3: Europe's Most Wanted led the weekend with a $60.4 million debut, followed by a big opening for Ridley Scott's alien saga Prometheus at No. 2 with $50 million. DreamWorks Animation's Madagascar 3 was the family favourite for the weekend, reuniting voice stars Ben Stiller, Chris Rock, Jada Pinkett Smith and David Schwimmer as the zoo animals continue their travels by joining a circus. Prometheus, from 20th Century Fox, stars Noomi Rapace, Michael Fassbender and Charlize Theron in an offshoot of director's Scott's 1979 science-fiction horror tale Alien. Prometheus did big business despite an R rating, which can limit a movie's audience in the U.S. since those under 17 must see it with an adult.

Metric find their system

New album. Band parlays their success into making music on their own terms — and gets experimental on Synthetica

scene@metronews.ca

It's a well-worn cliché: emerging indie band with big buzz but few resources faces umpteen struggles along the way before finally breaking through and becoming a bona fide international success.

But despite their steady rise, Metric have always refused to take the expected route — while other bands in their position may have succumbed to the pressures that go hand-in-hand with crossing over into the mainstream, they decided to leverage their success a slightly different way — by making their next album entirely on their own terms.

The band's new record, Synthetica, offers a sleek digital-meets-analogue twist on the quartet's signature synth-pop — fans looking for a repeat of the shiny stadium anthems of 2009's Fantasies (which sold over 1 million singles and nearly 500,000 copies worldwide) might be slightly nonplussed, but to hear singer Emily Haines tell it, success equalled more creative freedom.

"You have to really have it together on all fronts," she notes.

"It's pretty challenging to navigate the business side and the sonic side — the music you want to create, who you want to work with, the live element. So it feels like we've slowly but surely made progress in all those areas over the years, and it feels good to be heading in the direction we always hoped to."

Aside from releasing their music entirely independently through their own label via various international partnerships, another piece of the puzzle was establishing their own studio at home in Toronto — being able to hunker down amidst guitarist-producer Jimmy Shaw's growing arsenal of vintage gear and instruments proved to be the key catalyst in defining Synthetica's sound.

"It sounded as if I were writing in this context that Jimmy created — this futuristic-yet-nostalgic kind of sound," says Haines, the band's principal lyricist.

"It's interesting with those instruments, because when they were invented, they were associated with the future. And now here we are in the supposed future, and those instruments actually sound really charming — they don't sound alien at all."

From the robotic stomp of first single Youth Without Youth (which quickly became the first single to ever debut at No. 1 on the Canadian Mediabase alternative radio chart) to the buzzy synths propelling surefire hit The Void, Synthetica paints a portrait of a modern era too preoccupied with keeping up than it is with taking stock.

"It's our examination of what's real and what's artificial," Haines explains.

"So it's a lot about looking back to look forward — it's not really so much about reminiscing as trying to get a handle on things so you can figure out which direction to take."

Mapping out their own route — literally and figuratively — will be a major part of Metric's preoccupations over the next year as the band hits the road across the globe in support of the new album ("You'd laugh if you saw the giant wall calendar that is our lives right now," Haines quips) while also managing the responsibilities that come with being in charge of their own creative and business interests.

"We seem to be living in exponential times, where things are changing so rapidly — obviously not just in music, but in all sectors of technology," Haines says.

"It's sort of more fun to be on the side where we're on, where we can be in the moment and try and experiment with things that haven't been done before, as opposed to trying to hold on to the way things used to be.

"But we're up for the whole thing — we feel like we're doing exactly what we're meant to do."

Perry keeps it professional

With her marriage to Russell Brand falling apart, Katy Perry learned how to keep her personal problems backstage while touring last year, she explains to Graham Norton in an interview.

"I love being onstage, and even though I went through some pretty tough times last year, I had to separate that because I know my problems are my problems and they are not the audience's problems," Perry says.

"They are here to see a show and to be entertained, so I got on that lift, put a smile on my face and went up (onstage) with my t–s spinning." After her interview, Perry was spotted grabbing dinner with Florence + the Machine guitarist Robert Ackroyd, with whom she'd supposedly split up last month.

Lindsay Lohan's car crash still happening

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

MONICA WEYMOUTH
scene@metronews.ca

Lindsay Lohan got into a nasty car accident in L.A. over the weekend, and because this is Lindsay Lohan, things are far from over.

The actress, who was driving, initially claimed that an 18-wheeler cut off her black Porsche, causing her to slam into the back of it and total her car.

We're not sure if the damage matches up to this story — we're not even sure we've ever seen a Porsche in one piece — but the driver of the truck tells TMZ that Lohan, who was speeding, caused the crash, then attempted to leave the scene while her assistants negotiated a bribe and removed the actress' belongings from the car.

"I'd already called 911 because they were trying to get away from the scene," the truck driver tells the site. "But they packed a bag and then the (assistant) told me, 'Don't mention the bag to the cops.'"

Lindsay, for her part, is sticking with her original story, but yesterday also floated the idea that the brakes on the Porsche, which was a rental, were recently replaced and failed.

Lindsay, we realize you didn't have a normal adolescence, so allow us to explain how this works: When you irresponsibly smash up an expensive car that isn't yours, the correct response is to cry, call your mom and say "officer" a lot.

Rinse and repeat as necessary.

Warning: Nude Snooki is lurking out there

Jersey Shore star Snooki seems to be the latest celebrity to get her phone hacked and, surprise, there were nude photos on there.

The pictures, which were first posted to the blog Egotastic, show her — or, if we're entertaining a really dark world, an impersonator — in a hotel room and appear to be at least six months old.

We can't decide what's more upsetting: That we've seen Snooki naked, or that we can estimate how long ago she was naked.

Marijuana more popular than smokes

A U.S. government survey shows more teens are now smoking pot than cigarettes.

The Centres for Disease Control and Prevention reports that 23 per cent of high school students said they recently smoked marijuana, while 18 per cent said they puffed cigarettes. The survey asked teens about a variety of risky behaviours.

For decades, the number of teens who smoke has been on the decline. Marijuana has fluctuated, and recently rose. At times, pot and cigarette smoking were at the same level, but last year marked the first time marijuana use was clearly greater.

An earlier survey by the University of Michigan also found that pot smoking was higher. A Michigan expert said teens today apparently see marijuana as less dangerous than cigarettes.

Of 'stolen' baby names

Etiquette. What if someone got to your "special" one first?

SHAWNA COHEN
Mommyish.com

Just days after Blue Ivy entered the world, proud parents Beyoncé and Jay-Z trademarked their little girl's name. But guess what? You can still name your little bundle Blue Ivy if your heart desires (just don't go using that name on your line of hipster onesies).

Baby names are a free for all. Nobody owns the rights to a baby name — not your cubicle mate, your BFF or your very own sister who had the name "Zoe" picked out from birth. And it's about time people stopped accusing others of "stealing" their baby names. This isn't high school, people!

Recently, the Social Security Administration released its list of the top American baby names for 2011. As fascinating as the list itself is, some people are actually upset if their chosen baby name happens to have fallen on it. For example, the name Mason is in the No. 2 spot for boys — much to the dismay of parents who believe they personally invented/discovered that name (newsflash: you didn't!).

One Mommyish reader named Katie shared her own ridiculous baby name-stealing story. It goes like this: A girl in her daughter's class is named Isabelle. Isabelle's mom went nuts when a fellow mom named her second child Isla. She claims to have invented the name Isabelle and she felt that Isla was just a bit too similar. So Isabelle's mom flipped out at Isla's poor mom and accused her of stealing the name she magically created by combining Izzy and Belle. (Isabelle's mom, if you happen to be reading this: Get a grip, lady!)

Also this month, the New York Times devoted space to this very issue. One reader "Meghan" from St. Louis — wrote in with the following:

"I'm expecting my first child next month. We're naming our son Benjamin, a family name filled with meaning. I told my colleagues months ago. My assistant is also expecting her first child. She recently announced that she will name her son Benjamin, too. I approached her privately and told her I was upset. She thought I was being unreasonable, and told me she chose the name after me because she thought it was cute. What should I do?"

Meghan, too, was told to get a grip — thank God! (It was even recommended that she consider the name Nenjabim as an alternative, which cracked me up.)

My point is this: If you have an "original" baby name picked out, don't share it in advance. If you do share it in advance, don't be upset if someone else uses it.

Another point: If you hear a name that you like, go ahead and use it. Who cares if there are two Jadens in the same playgroup? Chances are there will be two more in little Jaden's classroom, anyway, and another seven at your next door neighbour's birthday party.

Is a Brave princess really groundbreaking?

LINDSAY CROSS
Mommyish.com

Who is excited about Pixar's newest movie Brave? Let's all raise our hands.

This will be the first time a Pixar movie has a sole female protagonist. It centres on a girl who happens to be a princess, but doesn't really act like one. The main character, Merida, is more interested in archery than in finding a prince.

As I've been eagerly watching the previews for Brave, I took it for granted that my headstrong daughter would be excited about the movie as well. This is a little girl who throws Batman-themed birthday parties. Of course she's going to love a princess who competes in a tournament for her own hand in marriage.

Except then I went and showed my daughter the trailers. "Ehh...Let's go swimming, Momma."

That was it. That was her response. I'm not going to pretend that I wasn't a little let down. "Did you see she shoots a bow and arrow?" I prompted.

I realize that I shouldn't push my daughter to like certain things, especially not movies or television. I should probably take pride in the fact that what I'm sure is an enormously expensive marketing campaign hasn't swayed my little girl's opinion. But I really want my daughter to love this awesome character who seems to be strong and fearless.

I guess Brave is a big deal for all the women who realize that they grew up with kind of crummy princesses. We're the ones who, as adults, keep demanding more progressive characters for young girls. Our kids really don't understand yet just why complacent princesses rescued by their one true love might set a bad example. To my daughter, who's always been told that girls could rescue themselves, this movie isn't all that groundbreaking.

Either that, or Disney's marketing team has lost its touch.

Brave, or maybe no big deal at all. DISNEY

A distinctly savoury and stylish take on cheesecake

Top these little cakes with smoked salmon with a sprig of fresh dill; pear with caramelized onions; caviar and sour cream; prosciutto-wrapped fig or; black olive tapenade.

1. Line a 23-cm (9-inch) pan with foil, letting it hang over the edge for easy removal of cheesecake; set aside.

2. Crust: In a bowl, combine graham cracker crumbs, melted butter, sugar and pepper. Press into pan. Bake in 150 C (300 F) oven for 10 minutes. Let cool completely.

3. Filling: Using a food processor, blend cream cheese, sugar, egg, egg yolk, sour cream, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Process until all ingredients are fully incorporated and batter is free of lumps, about 1 minute. Pulse in walnuts and chives.

4. Pour into pan and spread evenly over crust. Bake for 20 minutes or until centre is firm. Do not over-bake. Let cool completely in pan, cover and place in refrigerator overnight.

Freshen up your laundry list

DIY. Homemade detergent is a cheap and chemical-free alternative for your laundry

BEN KNIGHT
Metro Canada

In the market for an additive-free, fragrance-free laundry detergent that's also much, much cheaper than the brand you're using now?

You probably can't buy it. But you can make it yourself — at home.

And it's easy!

Using just three simple ingredients, you can mix a batch in less time than it takes to go to the store and buy a commercial brand.

"The first ingredient is a bar of soap," says Matt Jabs, co-founder of the website diyNatural.com, which is packed with innovative, inexpensive homemade cleaning solutions.

"It can really be any kind of soap, but a lot of people use either Ivory or maybe Castile soap."

"Then you have to grate the bar of soap," adds Matt's wife and site co-founder Betsy Jabs. "We always recommend you use the finest cheese grater, so the soap particles are small and not floating around in the laundry."

Add a cup of Borax, a cup of washing soda, mix thoroughly, and you're ready to do laundry.

"A lot of people will substitute baking soda for washing soda," Matt notes. "Washing soda is really good if you have hard water, because it's a water softener. But if you already have soft water, you're better off using baking soda."

The savings are impressive. This simple concoction cleans your clothes for about a nickel a load. The same amount of commercial detergent costs four times as much — around 20 cents.

"It's one of the things in our households that I think people don't give a second thought to," Betsy says. "They don't consider the chemicals and the harmful things that might be in the laundry detergent, that eventually end up on our skin every day. We only use ingredients that we know are safe, and aren't going to coat our clothes with any harmful chemicals."

If you've just purchased a modern high-efficiency washing machine, this homemade laundry soap is actually ideal.

"Consumers have been duped big-time that they need some kind of more expensive, high-efficiency detergent for HE machines," says Matt. "All they are is low-suds. Our recipe creates very little suds."

"People really do have to give this a chance," Betsy concludes. "It doesn't take a lot of time, and if you don't like the result, those ingredients can still be used elsewhere in the house."

Is there such thing as green hotels? And if so how can I find one?
Dan of Toronto

Indeed, there are green hotels!

Many work to conserve resources like energy and water — by installing everything from energy-efficient lighting to low-flow shower heads. Other green hotels tackle waste and pollution with food waste composting, in-room recycling and using eco-friendly cleaning products.

One option is to search the Green Key Eco-Rating Program website at greenkeyglobal.com. They rate hotels and resorts in Canada, the U.S. and internationally on environmental performance

Top Canadian Hotels (topcanadianhotels.com) also allows hotels to self-select as "green" by submitting an evaluation of their environmental performance — energy conservation, pollution prevention — to receive green leafs (one to five). However, it doesn't appear that the actions committed by the hotels are verified by another third party, or Top Canadian Hotels for that matter.

A leader in the green hotel movement has been the Fairmont Hotels & Resorts. In 1990, the company launched a Green Hotel Partnership Program to minimize its properties' carbon footprint. In Vancouver, the Fairmont Waterfront raises 500,000 honeybees on its rooftop and maintains a beautiful herb garden (excellent bee food), not to mention serving Ocean Wise seafood, organic wines and much more. They believe they can minimize their environmental impact while offering guests an outstanding experience! And why not?

A simple Internet search using "green hotel" and your destination city will likely reveal a few excellent choices. Be prepared to ask about what exactly makes them "green."

‘I saw him heal completely’

Wellness at work. Facing a health scare with her son, Angela Shim took matters into her own hands

THE IN-CREDIBILITY FACTOR
Teresa Kruze
life@metronews.ca

Sometimes the most amazing things in life come in the smallest packages.

Angela Shim was working in a bank when she gave birth prematurely to her son.

When he was diagnosed with severe health problems, she was told by the doctors that there was nothing more they could do.

“He was eight years old and looked like a dehydrated old man covered in gauze. I made a decision at that time I was going to do whatever it took to find a solution.”

Angela went to workshops, web seminars and naturopaths; then she went to work on her son.

“I saw him heal completely. We got him off puffers and medications and we saw a new person.”

Angela’s son is now a healthy 19-year-old.

She left the bank and created a new career helping other parents heal their children through food nutrition and energy management.

“I feel very blessed with what I’ve experienced and it has been an awakening process. Create your wellness bank account. And make sure you invest more than you withdraw.”

Angela Shim, co-founder of the Whole Child Network. PROVIDED

Not accepted: Fear of the flat envelope

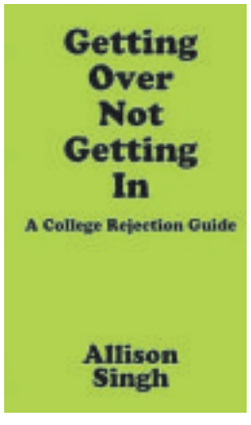
There’s life after that letter. Recover and recharge after post-secondary rejection

MELISSA REBER
Metro News

As a high school senior I remember anxiously awaiting word of my acceptance to my top university picks. That day came when I had all the envelopes in my hand — three stuffed to the brim with good news, and one pathetically thin with rejection.

I was offered a spot in another program, but this was still not what I was hoping for when I applied. As an 18-year-old who was not quite sure what I wanted to do with my life, the three acceptance letters left me with more choices then I knew what to do with, but there was a small part of me that felt the sting of not being ‘good enough’ for that one university.

Be proud of what you’ve accomplished, no matter what answer the envelope produces. ISTOCK



Receiving a rejection letter to one, or a few, of your university applications is not uncommon.

With the number of applicants rising each year the competition is fierce if you want to secure a spot at one of the top universities in Canada.

So what happens when you receive that rejection letter and your dreams of walking across the graduation stage at (insert school name here) are dashed?

Allison Singh, author of Getting Over Not Getting In: A College Rejection Guide, offers advice on getting past the feelings of inadequacy and upset:

Remember that rejection will not hold you back

“But entering college full of bitterness and self-doubt will,” says Singh,

“Research shows that these days it does not matter where students attend college, or at least not as much as they might think. Employers value skills and internship experience more than the name on a diploma. Success is up to the individual.”

Resumé reality

“Employers value skills and internship experience more than the name on a diploma. Success is up to the individual.”

Allison Singh
Author of Getting Over Not Getting In: A College Rejection Guide

Respect your feelings

“Sometimes we minimize the sting of rejection or condescendingly tell students to just brush it off. This is unfair,” Singh says. “In many ways, we have set students up for this by making the college admissions process the central focus of high school. I begin by reminding students that rejection is not an indicator of their ability or future success. They should be proud of what they accomplished in high school, regardless of where they end up.”

Move forward

Singh suggests students to take another look at the schools that did accept them. “Visit the schools, talk to students. If they keep looking back at the school that said no, they will miss out on all of the opportunities at the school that said yes.”

School statistics

Knowledge by the numbers

• In Ontario, high school students are applying to universities in record numbers, continuing an 11-year trend of increasing demand for university education, according to the Council of Ontario Universities.

• The total number of first-year applicants rose by 2.2 per cent to 109,985 applicants at the January 11, 2012 deadline for secondary school applicants.

* In 2010, there were almost 1.2 million students in degree programs on Canadian campuses: 755,000 undergraduates, 143,400 graduate students studying full-time, and an additional 275,800 students studying part-time.

Kings refocus with time running out

NHL. Doughty says club has tuned out distractions after losing two straight to Devils

The cellphones are going off and the blinds are going down. The Los Angeles Kings believe the best way to close out this Stanley Cup is to completely ignore the growing madness around them.

When they had a chance to make history and lift the trophy at Staples Center in Game 4, the requests for tickets and demands on their time went through the roof.

As a result, they may have been guilty of taking their eyes off the prize, something they've vowed not do when they get a third shot at knocking off the New Jersey Devils in Game 6 on Monday.

"We don't want any distractions," said defenceman Drew Doughty. "I think a lot of us before Game 4 were distracted with family members and friends, the cup coming in the building. A lot of things we have to put aside. Family always comes first for everyone, but at this point of the year the team has to come first.

"We're a family in the room and on the ice."

It was a refreshing piece of honesty from Doughty, who provided the best view behind the curtains as the Kings family convened at their practice facility Sunday for a meeting.

This is the first time all playoffs they've been part of a series that reached Game 6. The margin for error is getting slimmer and they're clearly looking to use the missed opportunities in this series for extra motivation.

"We realize a lot of us didn't play at our potential in Game 4," said Doughty. "We were nervous, worried about other things. All of us in the room were kind of frustrated that we were thinking about things ahead of time. (Coach) Darryl (Sutter) made sure that wasn't going to happen this time."

"The only way to really look at it in the series is the first goal."

Kings coach Darryl Sutter. A key factor to watch in Game 6 is who scores first. In a series where goals have been extremely tough to come by, the team who takes the first lead has won five in a row.

One for the ages

Significant history will be made no matter who raises the cup.

- Los Angeles is after its first title in 45 years while the Devils are seeking to become the first team since the 1942 Maple Leafs to erase a 3-0 deficit in the final.

Humboldt native takes NCAA heptathlon event

Canada's Brianne Theisen came into Friday with a 207-point lead in the heptathlon, and she left it with the second-highest score in NCAA meet history.

Theisen, from Humboldt, Sask., cruised to 6,440 points at the NCAA outdoor championships, the best since Diane Guthrue-Gresham of George Mason scored 6,527 back in 1995.

The University of Oregon athlete now has seven total NCAA championships, a mark topped by just three women.

It was the third straight NCAA title for Theisen, who said the key to her success was to not put too much pressure on herself.

"The harder you try — I mean, the shot put, the javelin — the worse they are. So it's kind of like I just went through the motions and didn't try and it was phenomenal," Theisen said.

Spain, Italy settle for draw in opener

For Spain, it was a bit of a stumble. For Italy, it was a bit of a reprieve.

Beginning its bid for a third straight major title, the Spanish rallied to earn a 1-1 draw Sunday against Italy, which entered this year's European Championship amid another match-fixing scandal.

Antonio Di Natale put Italy in front after an excellent setup from Andrea Pirlo in the 61st minute, but Cesc Fabregas equalized for the defending champions three minutes later by finishing off a dazzling display of Spain's trademark passing game.

"Being the favourite now is complicated, but in the end we found the character (to earn a draw)," Fabregas said.

Spain, which followed up its Euro 2008 victory with the 2010 World Cup title, dominated the Group C match for long stretches but struggled to finish at times, while Italy relied on dangerous counterattacks.

"The thing that really disappoints us is that we allowed them to equalize very quickly," Italy coach Cesare Prandelli said. "We were playing the world champions and we should have made them work harder to get back into the game. We gave Spain the chance to score goals. We need to improve, but that's our mentality."

Horoscope

Aries | March 21 - April 20. This is a good day for socializing, for spending quality time with your friends.

Taurus | April 21 - May 21. Enjoy yourself today but make sure you know your limits and make sure you stay within them.

Gemini | May 22 - June 20. Jupiter moves into your sign today, signaling the start of a more fortunate phase, but don't expect too much.

Cancer | June 21 - July 22. You are under no obligation to work your fingers to the bone, nor are you obliged to rescue a friend or work colleague from a situation that is entirely of their own making.

Leo | July 23 - Aug. 22. The moment you start to believe that nothing can possibly go wrong is often the moment when you are in the most danger.

Virgo | Aug. 23 - Sept. 22. The more you want something to happen today the more likely it is you will overreach yourself and make a serious mistake.

Libra | Sept. 23 - Oct. 22. You will be on the move in some fashion today. Where you go and what you do is entirely up to you but, for best results, try to make it some place that inspires you mentally, emotionally and spiritually too.

Scorpio | Oct. 23 - Nov. 21. You will be in a dreamy mood today but you need to be serious too, especially about money issues which involve other people.

Sagittarius | Nov. 22 - Dec. 21. Partners and colleagues will grant any favor you ask of them today — so ask away!

Capricorn | Dec. 22 - Jan 20. Resist the urge to rush things, especially on the work front where you won't do your reputation much good if you do too much too quickly and make silly mistakes.

Aquarius | Jan. 21 - Feb 18. Jupiter, planet of good fortune, moves in your favour today but that does not mean you can do as you please.

Pisces | Feb. 19 - March 20. Be wary of people who try to baffle you by introducing facts and figures that have no relevance to what you are working on.
